Q3 2015 MARKET REVIEW

The Select Managed Fund fell by 5.8% during the third quarter. The third quarter of 2015 saw global equities (MSCI World EUR TR) fall by 8.6% whereas Global government bond markets had a strong period.

This was the worst quarter for equities since 2011 and value orientated stocks were the worst performers. Unsurprisingly, in a risk-averse environment, Materials and Energy were the worst performing sectors while Utilities and Consumer Staples outperformed. The quarter saw a large increase in volatility as the VIX increased from lows of 11.95 to heights of 40.74, which haven't been seen since October 2011.

During the quarter various isolated events such as the delay to refinance Greek debt, the 30% fall of the Chinese stock market (Shenzhen B Index), the collapse of the Puerto Rican bond market and the alleged Brazilian political kickback scheme all contributed to market volatility. Consequently, the Federal Reserve placed its expected September interest rise on hold and the market reacted poorly, market participants expect the rate tightening cycle to begin in 2015 if not early 2016. Clearly, the FOMC would prefer greater stability in emerging markets and more robust signs of inflation in the US before proceeding.

In terms of investment style, growth stocks continued to outperform during the quarter, having done so since mid-2014. Europe and the UK were the standout regional performers in Q3, while Japan and Asia Pacific ex Japan underperformed.

Overall, we remain positive on equities on a relative basis this is particularly true given the context of near zero returns on cash and government bonds.
