MARKET REVIEW

The positive sentiment in global markets in the wake of Donald Trump's election win continued into 2017 as investors tried to get their heads around what the new administration would mean for markets. As markets moved higher, the level of volatility remained low even though there were some causes for concern. Global economic data held up well in the first quarter.

Early in March there was a meeting of the European Central Bank (ECB) where president Draghi was able to paint a picture of an encouraging economic rebound without needing at the moment to signal that monetary policy is in imminent danger of tightening. Then it was the turn of the US Federal Reserve (Fed) with the committee deciding to increase interest rates by 25 basis points (0.25%).

Washington was stunned at the surprise withdrawal of the Republican healthcare bill and what this could say about the continued division within the wider Republican Party. Whether this is a precursor to growing political and policy risks in the US, it is too early to say for now.

PORTFOLIO UPDATE

Equity markets posted good positive gains in the first quarter, and for euro based investors there was a change in the trend of recent years with European markets outperforming the US on a currency adjusted basis. The stand out performance though came from Emerging Markets, posting double digit gains for the quarter.

At the sector level there were strong moves in Technology and Healthcare, with the big loser being the Energy sector as the oil price fell in the final weeks of the quarter. Financials built on their post-election gains but with bond markets rallying in the March, these gains were tempered somewhat.

Company reporting season on both sides of the Atlantic provided a good fillip to markets with many companies beating expectations. Forecasts for the current year remain positive across all regions, but valuations do remain at elevated levels in the short term.

Please note the factors listed above are neither comprehensive nor exhaustive. Investors should note that there is no guarantee the Fund will meet its objectives. There is no assurance of investment return. The value of the investment may fall as well as rise.
